

True science will never contradict the truth of God's word, but there are so-called "contradictions" that actually are false knowledge or science. What are you going to do with these contradictions...when faith that comes from the Bible collides with the so-called science of man?

For instance, the Scripture says God created the universe and all that is in it, in 6 days, each comprised of a morning and evening, and implied to be successive days. Science says that can't be and "evidence" indicates things are billions of years old and that if it did take place in days, that they were eons long and possibly gapped by years in between. Who are you going to believe?

The Bible says a man (Jonah) was alive, conscious and praying to God...for 3 DAYS in the belly of a fish. Man says that is impossible. Can't happen. What are you going to do when faith and science collide?

Two men have walked on water.

"That is impossible" many will say. But, what is impossible with man is possible with God. Who are you going to go with?

In the beginning there was a literal tree, with literal fruit, which if eaten, made one like God knowing good and evil. To man that sounds like a fairy tale. Is it? Is it a cunningly devised fable? When science and faith collide, what do you believe? There likewise was a literal tree, with physical fruit, which if eaten maintained eternal life on earth. If eaten, one would never die. Do you believe that?

How about a serpent standing upright and talking? Do you believe that? How about a woman conceiving without the sperm of a man? It's true, you know. Or water covering the entire globe including the tallest mountain? Today that would be Mount Everest at around 29,000 feet above sea level. But, maybe that was sea level during the flood. Anyway, who are you going to go with...man or God?

Science says man evolved from animals. God says He made us in His image, forming the first man out of dust and breathing into his nose, and then forming the first woman by taking one of the man's ribs and shaping a female human around it. When science and faith collide, what are you going to do?

Finally, when science says there is no life after death and God says there is, who are you going to believe? When man says there is no such thing as sin, but God says there is, who are you going to believe? And when the idea of an eternal paradise being provided to those who come to God through Jesus Christ is scoffed at...what are you going to do? When faith and science collide, which do you believe?
